1. Practical advice to create a high-quality experience for cyclists

Like all visitors, cyclists need a good Scottish welcome. First impressions are key - make sure you have a friendly, proactive and responsive attitude towards everyone. If you are genuinely enthusiastic about your business, this will rub off on your guests. There are, however, some key products and services that cyclists look for during a visit that need to be available to suit their schedules.

Read our top tips on how to improve the quality of the visitor experience for all cyclists and increase business profitability as a result.

BUILDING THE LEGACY - RAISING AWARENESS

Stranraer to Eyemouth cycle route, Scotland
Southern stunner for two wheels

The rolling hills and ancient abbeys of the south of Scotland are often overlooked by visitors seeking a challenge for the Highlands, but a new 250-mile coast-to-coast cycle route, from Stranraer to Eyemouth, will remind people of the beauty at the bottom of the country. The route, which weaves from coast to coast on quiet roads, will take riders to Newton Stewart and the Galloway Forest Park, the UK's first Dark Sky Park. From there, a maze of leafy inland roads, with views over the Southern Uplands, lead to the 16th-century market town of Castle Douglas, Dumfries, where Robert Burns spent his final years, and the old mill towns and ruined abbeys of the Scottish Borders, following the River Tweed past St Walter Scott's Abbotsford and a plethora of Mary Queen of Scots history. The trail finishes in the historic town of Eyemouth, and is set to open in time for the UCI Cycling World Championships, running in Glasgow and around Scotland in August.

"The south of Scotland has a lot to offer, from Abbotsford and the abbeys to cultural events like Book Festival," says Markie Fitz, of @visitingScotland. "The enthusiasm of the local people and their hospitality make it a wonderful area to explore."

The south is already well known among mountain bikers for its scenic trail centres dotted around the region. It's hoped that the new route will show that road cycling is just as remarkable.

A screenshot of a mobile website interface for a cycling route. At the top, there's a green header with a back arrow and the text "BACK TO ROUTE". Below that, the title "ITINERARY RIVER TAY WAY EXPLORER ▲▲▲" is displayed. A short paragraph describes the route as a scenic journey between Highland Perthshire and Dundee. Below the text is a "DOWNLOAD GPX FILE" button. Further down, it states "A GPX file can be uploaded and used directly in SatNav and GPS units." and provides route statistics: "2.5 DAYS", "65M/105KM", and "1965FT/600M". A small image shows a landscape with a stone tower. Below this is a "ROUTE DIRECTION" section with a circular arrow icon and two location markers: "THE SCOTTISH CRANNOG CENTRE" and "V&A DUNDEE". The main part of the screenshot is a map showing a green cycling route through a region with many place names. At the bottom, there are two information boxes. The first is titled "THE SCOTTISH CRANNOG CENTRE - GRANDTULLY" and describes the starting point at Loch Tay, mentioning the Scottish Crannog Centre, gardens, and a distillery. It includes the text "1 HOUR • 13M/21KM" and "Points of interest at this stage". The second box is titled "GRANDTULLY - DUNKELD AND BIRNAM" and mentions "Taste delicious, handmade artisan chocolates".

WHAT'S NEXT?

- Develop a cycling tourism strategic legacy framework
- Influence and support infrastructure investment
- Continue to tell Scotland's cycling story
- Encourage businesses to adopt the Squiggly Bike logo
